New analysis
The ANPRM, also includes new analysis based on a possible policy scenario for a nicotine product standard. The analysis suggests that by slashing nicotine levels smoking rates could drop from the current 15 per cent to as low as 1.4 per cent.

Within an year of implementation, approximately five million additional adult smokers could quit smoking.

built at the site of a former steelworks near Adelaide, which Gupta's Liberty House bought in 2017.

Gupta secured a nearly $8 million loan from the South Australian government through its Renewable Technology Fund for the project, which is expected to create 100 construction jobs.

The announcement of Gupta's project came on the final day of campaigning ahead of Saturday's state election, a campaign where renewable energy has been a key issue.

Funds for the project were committed by Weatherill's government prior to the government going into a caretaker period, meaning the project will go ahead regardless of Saturday's result.
